A Suggestion for Prospective Brides and Their Hostesses-The Easter Bonnet-Personal Mention.

> Lent. Now, is it contrition, Without intermission, That keeps her devoted head bent? Of wicked transgression?

> > -George Hyde.

Oh, no! 'Tis the advent of Lent! For feeling compunction Is Fashion's pet "function," At about this same time every year; The time for reflection-And for the collection Of Easter gowns soon to appear!

A number of ladies in an Eastern city planned a novel entertainment recently. It was called a Cranford evening party. The charming little story of a village of women named "Cranford" suggested the idea, not of a poverty party, but an "elegant economy party." The rooms were decorated in all the old-fashioned things the entire party could collect. Card tables were covered with green balze, as that was the style in Cranford. The costumes were old fash- street. loned and the colffures were wonderful to behold, with their crimps and curls. The rooms were lighted with candles, and the game for the evening was "preference," which was the favorite game in Cranford. The refreshments were sponge biscuit, tea bread, sandwiches, cheese, tea and coffee, and the viands were brought in by a dainty little maid dressed in old-fashioned style.

The party was a great success. Another novel entertainment was given in Germantown, Pa. This was a poster and advertising entertainment. A series of living pictures was given and the young ladies and young men were dressed and posed to represent well-known posters and adver-"Story of a Sleeve," which advertised an extender for sleeves. There were cigarette. cereals, chocolate, cocoa and a score of other posters, the series making a delightful evening. The addition of music at in-tervals gave variety to the programme. The entertainment was given for the bene-

A glaring novelty of the season is the gay red gloves that are brought out. These are the passing fad and will be worn by many who affect the latest styles. The truly elegant woman keeps to the suede mosquetaire of plain color and light stitching, and when she has these on her hands knows she is correct, whatever may be the fancy for the moment. The mosquetaire is good style for day or evening, and for a woman with a wrist that is not beautiful they hide all the defects. A glove gives the finishing touch to a costume.

There is a great collection of articles at the Propylacum which have been left from time to time by those attending the parties or club meetings. There are a half dozen of pretty lace pins, a beautiful muff with a mass of tulle tucked in its cozy recess, fans enough to cool one all summer, and an array which the owners would doubtless like to repossess, and one which the curator would be happy to have claimed.

Brides are to be numerous through the late spring and early summer months, and the usual round of entertainments in their luncheon was recently made. The whole surface of the square table is to be covered with asparagus fern in diamonds of about eight inches from point to point, crossing and recrossing to form an exact square, leaving a border about fourteen inches clear for the plates, glasses, etc. This network is made by fastening the vine at regular intervals with minute safety pins to one side of the cloth and carefully keeping true diagonal lines to the opposite after the manner of an old latticed window. Through it marguerites, full blown flowers and many buds are to be thickly strewn, so placed as to raise their heads clearly and having the most starry, youthful look of gayety, such as flowers have in a dow, and yet a dainty air which is well suited to the young guests.

The latest line of millinery and dress fabrics is glass. A Venetian firm is turning out glass bonnets by the thousand, which, while possessing all the shimmer and brilliancy of silk, are, when soiled, re-stored to their pristine beauty by the homely application of soap and water. The Infanta of Spain has been presented with a white glass ball dress, and the vitreous filaments are said to yield a most graceful and charming effect. The glass threads are sufficiently fine to render the garment as pliable as silk, and the seams are glued.

CLOTHED IN CRIMSON. Fashionable Women Will Wear Much Red This Spring.

There were a few last season who said that the rioting effect of colors used in d. ess and millinery was a temporary thing; that another season would not see lilac, purple and pink together. These people were not very good prophets. This spring will probably surpass anything in the way of combination of colors that the last decade or two has known. To begin at the very beginning-though this is not a fairy tale—that most conspicuous of all colors, bright crimson is to be the favorite. Last winter when we put a faint piping of crimson or one red ros in the dark hat we thought ourselves quite gay, in fact, rather too brilliant probably for the street. But, bless you, we will walk abroad this spring clothed in scarlet from head to foot, if we wish to be fashion Rumors of this brilliant plumage have come to us through the foreign papers, but the reality of it dawned upon me in full force Saturday in New York, when met a woman wearing a scarlet broadcloth gown. The skirt was trimmed in bands of Hercules braid, the bodice with a bolero trimmed with black Hercules braid, cuffs and collars made of black pressed velvet. She wore a black braided straw toque with a black bird at the side. I admit that I turned and stared at her, but she seeme to excite no comment, the reason why, found before the day was over: that she was not particularly conspicuous in such a garb. Everyone is rioting in crimson. At least the color is better than yellow. I believe it was Charles Dudley Warner who called this sunshiny tone "the color of decadence," and hoped that the women would scarlet should come in for spring and summer when it would have been more admirable for winter. But fashion is always little odd, and one must give in to her. Those who do not care for whole suits of erimson will probably go in for what a New York dressmaker said would be quite the thing-a dark red sail cloth skirt made over black with a Greek border of black braid around the bottom An Eton jacket of black silk cloth or black bengaline will be worn with this The bodice of whatever material you choose. I know you will hesitate to set you it is going to be quite the thing.

the precedent of this custom, but I assure As for crimson facings and pipings and flowers and vest fronts and cuffs, they are all the rage. This dash of crimson will predominate in dress just as the touch of black satin did on everything last spring and summer, but black and crimson wil now intermingle and be the favorite combination of dashing women. If you are insignificant looking, beware how you wear crimson. It takes a woman of some presence, a woman with an "air" to wear this glowing color in heavy materials on the

But you may be small or large, blond or dark and crimson in the evening and in the louse will suit you. For whatever else you do have a crimson house dress. Red gauze with crescents of black or red or white silk will be used for all kinds of dancing gowns, made up over any kind of silk Every woman is going in for a crimson bodice to finish the season with her black satin skirt. The red bodice will invariably be worn with a black or a white or a crimson fichu made of Brussels net. Fichus are going to be the darlings of soclety. A woman can get up one of these crimson handkerchiefs inexpensively at home. They should be made very long, curved to fit the neck, the top ruffle hanging over to simulate a narrow cape. are worn to show a bit of the neck at the back, crossed loosely over the bust, taken under the arms and tied in a large bow at the back of the waist with narrow ends hanging to the hem of the skirt. you have time and money make four of them and wear them on your winter bodices, which have seen a season's service, or on organdles; in fact, on all your light dresses, high or low-necked. It is a mis take to suppose that they make the stout woman look stouter, for they do not. But to return to the color of the season, which, by the way, let us hope does not argue that this is to be a senson of wickedness. for we all know that from the beginning of time brilliant scarlet has been the sign symbol of his Majesty of the under world If you are very demure and cannot tolerate the thought of the scarlet gown on the street, at least concede enough to fashion to line almost everything you wear with crimson, or crimson and black; the somberest black tailor gown must be lifted to show a dust ruffle of red. The darkest cape we wear to the opera can be lined with crimson satin. The somber blue of your tailor jacket must swing to the wind to show an inside lining of scarlet, and if you are nobby you will put cuffs and collar on this jacket in dark red velvet. Whatever else you do you must touch your hat with crimson, and if you belong to that brigade whose equipment will be red from head to foot, then you will buy one of those hats that many of the shopkeepers are showing in solid crimson straw and trimmed in red roses and green geranium If you do not care for so large a hat make your toque of braided straw and put a flaring red bird at the side of it, or put among your black velvet loops a flash of scarlet wings. A famous shirt maker on Twenty-third street has his window filled with red cotton shirt waists for the spring and summer, made in all styles, after all designs, to be worn with a white linen collar and cuffs and wide black leather belt. Red taffeta for bodices will be almost indispensable to the wardrobe of the woman who keeps up with the fashions, and there is this much to say about the coming of the new color, that it is becoming to almost all faces. There are very few eyes and hair that are not shown to more advantage by a splash of crimson. Even the elaborate silk starfs which serve as head gear for women who go out a deal in the evening are made of red gauze with ruffles around them of red or white plaited chiffon. So be careful and don't throw away a bit of scarlet that you have in your possession. With a little manipulation it can be used to advantage. I would not suggest that during the Lenten season of sack cloth and ashes you should begin and wear this brilliant plumage, but you can come out in all your glory in it on Easter day. And if all the women are going to wear crimson who declare they are on that day, the sun, looking down upon such a sight, may turn pale with envy, thinking that the earth has developed some sun of its own which will rival his in brillancy and splendor. It may be that on Easter Monday we will all have to wear smoked glasses.

We have made special arrangements with two of the most noted women's tailors in New York, whereby we are appointed exclusive selling agents for Indiana for their Suits. These firms make nothing but the highest grade suits, such as are handled by Hollander, Morrison. Altman and other well-known New York retailers, and to-morrow we invite you to see the display. Of most of the styles shown, there is but one of a kind. Perfectly made, beautifully finished, silk-lined throughout. Prices, $25 to $55.
